Activity Details: The university integrates passive architectural principles in the design of its academic and residential buildings. Buildings are constructed with natural ventilation systems, airflow corridors, and architectural gaps between walls and roofs to enable effective natural air circulation. This design significantly reduces dependence on mechanical cooling systems and air conditioning, thereby lowering electricity demand. ADBU has installed grid-connected rooftop solar photovoltaic systems with a total capacity of approximately 320 kWp across its campuses. These installations generate renewable electricity that supplements the grid supply and reduces dependence on conventional fossil-fuel-based power. The solar installations contribute to reducing the university's electricity expenditure by approximately 16–20% on average per month. The university has undertaken a systematic transition from conventional lighting systems to energy-efficient LED lighting across classrooms, laboratories and of
